* * *

Little Ann Church, 19 years old, but looking like 14, is fascinated by Major Anthony Seymour while travelling from London to Bombay. James Gilchrist, in the Colonial Service, informs him that she is the daughter of one of his old flames. He loses interest in her from then on.

Their love for each other is disclosed after a short panic aboard ship. Ann discovers him asleep, on deck. She sits beside him and falls asleep, her head resting against him. When he awakens, he carries her to her room. Gilchrist sees Seymour and reports the matter to the captain. Seymour informs the captain that they are engaged.

Mrs. Church recognizes Seymour immediately upon seeing him, under the observing eyes of her husband who knows of their past affair. Seymour calls, asking for Ann's hand. The mother begs for a six months' delay. Gilchrist then divulges to Ann the past relations between her mother and her intended husband.

Gilchrist is thoroughly trounced by Seymour. But Ann, heartbroken, boards a steamship bound for Bombay. She is surprised in her stateroom by Gilchrist, under pressure from Seymour, who comes to tell her that his stories were a maze of lies, prompted by jealousy.

A reconciliation is soon effected and the pair agree to be married by the captain and make a return trip to England for their honeymoon.
